- A. There's something called a form ADV which the investment advisory firm has to fill out the form ADV. I was an investment adviser representative of a firm, so my information went into the ADV about who I was, what was my background, did I have any criminal background. They want to know all this if they're going to license you to give advice to people. And so I would have to review those forms before they were filed with
- 9 Q. And who was the form ADV filed with?
- 10 | A. Who was it filed with?
- 11 | Q. Yes.

12 A. It's filed with the Securities & Exchange Commission and 13 the particular state that you are doing business in.

both the State of Maryland, in my case, and the SEC.

- Q. Are you familiar with -- as a registered investment adviser, are you familiar with any other documents that an investment adviser has to file with the SEC?
 - A. Other than the ADV, I mean there are annual reports about your business that has to be filed with the SEC, there's information for instance luckily it never happened to me, but if I did something wrong while I was advising somebody and they filed a complaint with what is called FINRA. FINRA is the governing agency that regulates brokers. I would need to notify the SEC of that. And I think, if that's what you're asking, those are the ones that come to mind.
 - Q. With respect to the SEC, are you familiar with what is called a Form BD?

Yes, the Form BD is a form filed with the SEC. It's a 2 3 broker-dealer form, and it's for a business that is doing 4 business in the financial aspect of advisory broker-dealer 5 market making type businesses. You need to file a Form BD with 6 the SEC to disclose information about who you are, what you're doing, how long you've been in business, basic demographics and 7 8 questions that the SEC wants to know to be able to protect the 9 public. That's the basic purpose of it.

- Q. And you might have mentioned this before, but does your expertise also extend to computer forensics?
- A. It does. I think I mentioned that earlier. I went owned a computer forensics company. I have undergone specific training in how to conduct computer examinations. When we talk computer forensics, it's not finding the email sitting in someone's inbox, it's going beneath the hood and looking with special software that if someone deleted files that software can find it. If someone sent information out on a thumb drive, I can tell what information went out on that thumb drive through kind of underneath the system. It's akin to getting into your car, lifting the hood, there's a lot of electronics, something underneath is making it all work, and that's what computer forensics looks at. Yes, I do have expertise in that.
- Q. Mr. Dubinsky, how many times have you offered expert opinions in fraud cases?

THE COURT: And, Mr. Dubinsky, can you tell us where you saw this or where you obtained this document.

THE WITNESS: This was in documents that I was provided access to during the investigation. I don't see a Bates -- there's a public Bates number. So this would have been obtained by the trustee and provided to me when I had access to documents.

MS. HOANG: Your Honor, this is an exhibit on -- I either check the box for registration or an amendment.

for the initial registration.
